Introduction

Lindsey Mundt's practice focuses on civil litigation, white collar criminal defense, and government investigations. Lindsey has handled a wide variety of commercial litigation and government enforcement matters, including in the areas of contract disputes, fraud, Consumer Protection Act violations, employment, and securities litigation. Lindsey also conducts internal investigations to assist businesses in responding to or avoiding employment-related claims.

Prior to joining Calfo Eakes & Ostrovsky, Lindsey served as a law clerk for United States District Court Judge Sharon L. Gleason in the District of Alaska and Justice Craig F. Stowers on the Alaska Supreme Court. Lindsey had previously served as an extern for United States District Court Judge John C. Coughenour in the Western District of Washington and Justice Debra L. Stephens on the Washington State Supreme Court.

Lindsey graduated summa cum laude from Seattle University School of Law, where she served as Symposium Chair for the Seattle University Law Review. She received her bachelor's degree from Claremont McKenna College in Economics.
